

ABSTRACT

Apparatus and method for constructing a network, including installing a first plurality of communication edges interconnecting a second plurality of communication nodes and determining first and second pluralities of capacity values for the first plurality of communication edges and the second plurality of communication nodes respectively such that, for at least one individual node, the sum of capacity values of the edges connected to that node exceeds the potential capacity value of that node.